In recognition and support of Youth Safety Day 2020, following is some workplace safety information for young workers:

Young Workers Have Rights and Responsibilities in the Workplace

“Everyone in the workplace is legally responsible for workplace safety. Before you start a new job, you should know about health and safety standards in the workplace. By law, you have three basic rights under The Saskatchewan Employment Act:

- The Right to Know what hazards are in the workplace and how to prevent injuries from those hazards.
- The Right to Participate in health and safety activities in your workplace.
- The Right to Refuse work you believe to be unusually dangerous to yourself or others.

If it feels wrong, it probably is wrong. If you are unsure, ask questions. You cannot be fired for refusing unusually dangerous work.

You also have responsibilities in the workplace:

1. The responsibility to work safely using all machinery and equipment in the way you were trained.
2. The responsibility to report health and safety concerns, including unsafe activities and conditions, to your supervisor. Ask questions if you are unsure how to do something safely.
3. The responsibility to properly use or wear protective devices and to not remove a guard or device designed to protect you.
4. The responsibility to protect yourself and others from harm as much as possible and to not harass others at work.”
